1. [redacted] units from Fuerstenberg were moved to Lychen, and the quarters vacated by them were returned to the former owners.
2. On 10 September, the headquarters buildings in Fuerstenberg were still occupied by Soviet troops. However, some troops were moved to joint quarters in an effort to vacate billets at the edge of the town. The castle of Fuerstenberg was vacated and turned over to the municipal administration. When leaving the castle, the Soviets dismantled all electric and sanitary installations and moved them to the former concentration camp of Ravensbrueck. The kommandatura was also vacated and moved to an undetermined place. Soviet women who arrived during the first days of September were to replace German employees at Soviet troop units. *

* [redacted] Comment. The report indicates that troops at the post were withdrawn from some buildings and quartered together with other troops, and that some former troop billets were derequisitioned by the Soviet Army. Since the headquarters buildings were apparently not affected by this measure, the situation there is believed unchanged. [redacted] 50X1-HUM

It is possible that the military hospital previously quartered in the castle of Fuerstenberg has been moved to the former sanatorium for injured athletes in Hohenlychen. [redacted] 50X1-HUM
